I. INTRODUCTION

Here at California Western School of Law (CWSL), we believe it is essential that a law school support its graduates throughout their legal and non-legal careers alike. The Career and Professional Development Office (CPDO) continues to serve as a primary resource for alumni seeking employment-related assistance. The purpose of this Alumni Guide is to provide you with the tools necessary to confidently begin your post-graduation job search, whether this is your first job after graduation or your fifth.

II. CPDO STAFF

Everyone in the Career and Professional Development Office is dedicated to giving full effort to assist you on your way to a highly rewarding and satisfying career in the law. Get to know us. The more we know of you, the better we will be able to help you. With over fifty years of law practice experience on our staff, we have deep knowledge of how to develop a successful career in the law.

Courtney Miklusak, Esq., Assistant Dean

Courtney is responsible for all CPDO operations and actively promotes California Western to the legal community to maximize opportunities available to you. Her job is to make sure you have the skills and information necessary to access the opportunities you desire. After graduating from California Western School of Law, Courtney practiced both civil litigation and transactional law in San Diego. She worked in small and medium size private law firms for seven years prior to joining the Career and Professional Development Office. Courtney works to develop and strengthen relationships between the CPDO and legal employers and to create job opportunities for law students and graduates. As well, she counsels law students, tapping into her strong knowledge of the legal market in San Diego and beyond.

Matthew Lab, Esq., Director, Access to Law Initiative (ALI) & Professional Development

As the Director of ALI, Matthew manages all aspects of ALI and empowers entrepreneurial and public service minded alumni to make a living while making a difference. A program for alumni pursuing solo, small firm, or non-profit entity practice, ALI provides critical training, support and post-graduate education while providing access to law to underserved segments of the community. As the Director of Professional Development, Matthew works closely with the Assistant Dean and Associate Directors in the development and administration of the CPDO's professional development curriculum that is offered to students and graduates.

Prior to joining the CPDO in 2011, Matthew practiced law full-time for more than 9 years in both law firm and in-house corporate settings in the areas of business and real estate litigation and commercial transactions. He continues to serve as retained outside legal counsel for select local companies and occasionally as an adjunct instructor of real estate law with the San Diego Community College District. He earned his J.D. at UC Hastings and holds a California Real Estate Broker's license.

Jocelyn Salvatori, Esq., Associate Director

Jocelyn counsels first, second and third year students, and conducts training seminars in professional development to ensure that students are knowledgeable about and prepared for the legal market. She also works with students who are interested in pursuing judicial externships and clerkships. Jocelyn has more than seven years of private law firm experience, including representing small and large corporations in business litigation, labor and employment litigation, and product defect litigation. She understands what it takes to be successful in the law practice, and is able to greatly enhance students' marketability.

Noelle Dorman, Assistant Director, Projects and Employer Development

Noelle is the Assistant Director and point person for disseminating information about job opportunities to you. She graduated from Cal State Fullerton with her B.A. in Political Science, and she received an M.S. in Child Development from San Diego State. She has worked for elected officials in both the California State Legislature and US Congress on a variety of public policy issues. In addition, she has a well-established background in community relations, research, and education. Noelle handles all logistics associated with employer relations, on-campus interviews and regional and national job fairs. She manages our Online Job Database and keeps you apprised of job opportunities as they arise, as well as managing our Career and Professional Development operations.

Drew Lautemann, Esq., Assistant Director, Pro Bono & Public Service

Drew counsels first, second, and third year students and coordinates various CWSL public interest programs, including the Pro Bono and Public Service Programs, the Pro Bono Fair, the Access to Law Incubator's public service component, and others. He received his Juris Doctor degree from CWSL in 2009 and Master of Laws degree from University of San Diego School of Law in 2010. As a Program Manager with the Consensus Organizing Center at San Diego State University (SDSU) from 2009-2014, Drew created A.I.M. for Law, a program to educate first-generation and inner-city students about the legal profession and motivate them to pursue careers in the law. During that time he also managed a solo immigration law practice, supervised the CWSL City Heights Community Law Project, created and led a study-abroad course to Costa Rica, tutored students for the California Bar Exam, and taught Master of Social Work courses at SDSU.

Robin Lake, Esq., Graduate Career Advisor

Robin counsels students and graduates of all levels and assists the CPDO with its many programs designed to support students with their career development. Robin has over twenty years of transactional law experience in San Diego. She practiced for eight years with a large national firm, and has also worked with private medium-sized and small law firms. Robin's broad background provides her with insight into the legal market and how to thrive in a law practice. Robin is responsible for our Mentor Program which matches second and third year students with practicing lawyers having similar interests. She also oversees our alumni programs and curriculum.

Heidi Weaver, Esq., Career Advisor

Heidi counsels first, second and third-year students, as well as recent graduates and LL.M. students. She assists with CPDO's marketing materials, including handouts and webinars. She also coordinates our office's Lunch With Lawyers program to match students with practitioners in their areas of interest. Heidi has almost ten years of private law firm experience, including representing small and large corporations in business litigation, labor and employment litigation, construction defect, and elder abuse litigation. She draws from her professional experience to assist our students and alumni to positively distinguish themselves in the competitive legal job market.

Efa Akutekha, Department Coordinator

Efa is the Department Coordinator for the CPDO. She is responsible for assisting students and alumni, managing employer and student databases, monitoring and promoting job opportunities, and assisting with employer development. In addition to the overall management of the CPDO, Efa is responsible for overseeing the department's online presence. Her background in digital media production keeps our office up to date with new technology, helping us stay in touch with the CWSL community at large. She obtained a B.A. in Broadcasting and Visual Media from Seton Hall University.

Wanda Harvey-Amoke, Administrative Assistant

Wanda is your front line contact in the office. She obtained her B.S. in Business Administration with an emphasis in Service Sector Management from California State University San Marcos and is here to assist you during the day and evening hours. Wanda will direct you to appropriate resources so your questions are answered quickly and efficiently. She also helps make our office your office, so you are able to research and communicate with employers effectively and professionally.

III. ALUMNI RESOURCES

A. Counseling

Our graduate career advisor works with graduates on an individual basis to discuss career options and develop job search plans. In addition, the graduate career advisor is available for resume/cover letter review, mock interviews, alumni outreach, and other job related resources to assist you as needed. We strongly recommend that you take advantage of the individual counseling sessions, which may be done in person or over the phone. You can schedule an appointment any day of the week throughout the calendar year by calling (619) 525-7087.

B. Symplicity

As a graduate of CWSL, you continue to have access to our online database, Symplicity. Post-graduate and attorney jobs are continually posted in both legal and non-legal industries. Graduates who wish to take advantage of this free legal resource can login by using the same username and password they used as a student. In order to have access to alumni postings, your Symplicity profile must be updated and your status must reflect you are a graduate. For logon assistance, please contact the CPDO.

C. Reciprocity

For alumni who wish to practice outside of San Diego County, you can request “reciprocity” access to career services from a limited number of law schools across the country. If access is granted, law schools usually impose strict guidelines as to the use of reciprocity. To learn more about a school’s reciprocity policy, please call or visit that school’s website. To make a reciprocity request, please contact the CPDO.

D. Consortium In Legal Education (CILE)

CILE is a cooperative model for legal education consisting of four independent ABA and AALS accredited American law schools:

- California Western School of Law
- New England School of Law in Boston
- South Texas College of Law in Houston
- William Mitchell College of Law in St. Paul

The Consortium is an innovative educational service organization of combined resources and cooperative effort designed to enhance and strengthen the educational mission of each school separately and all of them collectively. This unique partnership provides expanded opportunities for educational programs on a national and international basis. For graduates, this partnership provides placement assistance and access to career resources of another Consortium law school. In addition, through the CWSL CPDO webpage, graduates continue to have access to entry level and experienced attorney positions in each region of a Consortium law school.

E. BYU Intercollegiate Alumni Job Bank

CWSL alumni have access to the Intercollegiate Job Bank maintained by Brigham Young University Law School. The job bank consists of job postings from around the country by a number of cooperating law schools. If you are interested in a legal career in another state, this is an especially useful resource. Alumni can access these postings through the CWSL CPDO webpage. Please contact the CPDO for the username and password.

F. CWSL On-line Alumni Database

The CWSL on-line database is your one-stop resource for information to help you locate and contact your fellow California Western alumni. For purposes of networking, mentorship, informational interviews, or to simply reach out, the CWSL on-line Alumni database allows graduates to stay in touch with the CWSL community. Alumni can access this database by visiting CWSL’s Alumni webpage.

IV. RESUMES

A. Resume Basics:

- Be truthful and accurate.
- Must be error-free (first example of writing sample).
- Concise yet informative.
- Use white, off-white or cream resume weight paper.

- Use one font type and keep it in the 10-12 point range. However, your name should appear in a larger font size.
- One page (exception if extensive experience).
- Update email address to permanent, non-CWSL email address.
- Target resume for prospective employer.
- Clear and easy to understand – translate information into English, include explanatory notes (e.g. for our LLM students: “J.D. equivalent”).
- Do not include information regarding health, age or marital status.
- Do not include “Statement of Purpose.”
- Do not state “References and writing samples available upon request.”
- If you are a recent graduate, the “Education” section should follow the “Professional” section. However, if you have been out of law school for a few years and possess substantive legal experience, then the “Experience” section should be the second heading on the resume.

B. Resume Changes to Make Upon Graduation:

Upon graduation, you must change your CWSL information to reflect your new degree. The line with your degree and graduation date should read:

Juris Doctor, [Month Year] (i.e. Juris Doctor, May 2014)

Latin honors (cum laude, magna cum laude and summa cum laude) should be in lower case and italics. If you graduated with Latin honors, the line should read:

Juris Doctor, [latin honor], [Month Year] (i.e. Juris Doctor, cum laude, May 2014)

C. Resume Changes to Make After the Bar Exam:

After graduation, you should now add a heading to your resume, above the EDUCATION heading called “PROFESSIONAL”.

- If you are sitting for a bar, underneath this heading write: “Sitting for the California [or appropriate state] Bar Examination, July 2014”.
- If you recently took a bar and are awaiting results, underneath this heading write: “Awaiting Results of the July 2012 California [or appropriate state] Bar Exam”.
- If you have passed a bar exam, underneath this heading write: “Member of California State Bar, July 2014, Member 2055077”.
- If you have passed a bar exam but waiting for moral character approval write: Passed California Bar, July 2014.
- If you have passed a bar exam and are approved to be sworn in write: Passed California Bar, July 2014. To be sworn in on....
- Under this heading you can also put any other professional license or memberships you have, e.g. “Licensed Real Estate Broker”.

V. COVER LETTER

The cover letter is your first – and possibly only – opportunity to engage a prospective employer. Your cover letter is essentially your first real legal writing sample. It is a key marketing tool to convince the employer to take the time to look at your resume. Think of it as “bait” that you are using to “hook” the reader.

The primary purpose of a cover letter is to get an interview. A related purpose is to communicate “the intangibles” of your candidacy not readily apparent from the factual content of your resume. A good cover letter explains WHY your experiences, accomplishments and skills are relevant to the specific position. Your cover letter should be written in a tone that is direct, unassuming and conveys enthusiasm. Your resume tells them what you have; your cover letter tells them WHY what you have is important to them and WHY they should hire you.

A. Cover Letter Basics

- Put yourself in the employer’s shoes. Remember, they are hiring you to do a job for them, not so you can gain experience.
- Do not re-state your resume.
- Present a strong style.
- Do not over promote.
- Use proper format and eliminate typos and grammatical errors.
- For electronic submissions, convert all of your materials into PDF.

B. Categories of Cover Letters

1. Application Letters. This type of cover letter responds to a specific job advertisement or position announcement. As a result, you will know some basic information about the position and the employer. Your application letter should demonstrate your enthusiasm for the work involved in the particular position, your knowledge about the employer, and illustrate how your skills and qualifications fit the requirements of the position. It can be very helpful to restate the major requirements set forth in the job advertisement or position announcement and show how your qualifications match them by linking them with your related past experiences.
2. Prospecting Letters. One would send this type of cover letter to individuals or organizations with whom you would like to work, but who have not listed or advertised an available position. Similar in format to the application letter, prospecting letters must also be targeted to a particular person within the organization. You can usually find a good contact person and that person’s information through a search of the employer’s website, or through one of the directories that can be found online such as the NALP Directory, Yellow Book Directories or Martindale-Hubbell (www.martindale.com). In this circumstance, you may have less information about the particular duties you will be asked to perform were you to be hired, although you will know the organization’s major practice areas through your research. As a result, prospecting letters address skills in a broader context and in a slightly more generic manner than in an application letter where you know more details about the specific job listing.

The CPDO has a variety of lists which include local, regional and intellectual property law firms, as well as statewide Public Defender and District Attorney’s Offices. These lists are available by request only. You can use the list(s) as a resource for prospecting letters, which can be a great additional element of your job search strategy. Note that the law firm lists are focused on small to mid-sized law firms. The practice areas are listed for you in many instances, but not all.

Please use this list as a starting point, and not a replacement, for your research into law firms that could be good employment fits for you. While the information stated in the list was deemed reliable at the time the list was created, it is not exhaustive, and thus must be verified by you before you send out any prospecting letters.

You should probably make a list of about 25-30 firms that fit your interest to send prospecting letters in which you offer your services (either as an associate or contract attorney). In terms of protocol, here are some pointers:

- Target your search: Research the prospective employers and only apply to those firms with practice areas that fit your interests and skill set. The key is to find employers that you might be interested in – organizations, firms, public entities, legal or non-legal. Create a chart, spreadsheet, notebook or other tool to use to write down employer names and keep track of contacts and personal connections to those employers. The graduate career advisor can help you develop a list.
- Research Employer Websites: Many firms and organizations have websites – check them out for information that will give you more in-depth knowledge about the potential employer. Look at practice areas and profiles of their attorneys to find information of interest or connections. (Did they go to CWSL? Same college or university as you? Clerk for the judge you are externing for?)
- Who to contact at the firm: Direct your letter to an individual, not just to the firm. Here are some ways to figure out to whom to address the letter:

First choice: Write to someone you know at the firm personally or through a contact who agrees you can use their name (e.g., "Professor Smith suggested I contact you.").

Second choice: Direct your letter to a CWSL alum or an alum from your undergraduate institution.

Third Choice: Call the firm and ask who is in charge of hiring. If someone takes the time to speak with you, send a thank you email, even if they are not hiring at that time. Lawyers always appreciate being thanked for their time. Follow-up helps cement a relationship and helps them remember you.

Fourth Choice: Find the name of the most senior lawyer who seems to do the work you are interested in doing and direct your letter to that lawyer.

Fifth Choice: If you really want to work for a firm, think about putting on a suit (and your most professional attitude), visiting the firm (with copies of your resume, transcript and best writing sample in hand) and asking to speak with the person in charge of hiring. It is an aggressive approach, but hey, small firms need lawyers who are go-getters!

- Keep track of all your targeted employers and contacts: Set up a spreadsheet, chart, list, notebook, post-it notes or whatever works for you to keep track of with whom you've spoken, to whom you've sent prospecting letters, to whom you've sent informational interview requests.

- Follow up: Set up a system to remind you to follow-up a week or ten days after making the initial contact. Failure to follow up is a major reason job seekers don't get hired quickly. Just because the employer doesn't call doesn't mean she isn't interested! Most of the people you write to will be extremely busy, and if you tell them in your letter that you'll follow-up, an easy thing for them to do is set aside your letter and wait for your call. Don't lose opportunities to another job-seeker who has more gumption to call!
- Develop a pitch: If following up is not naturally comfortable, develop a follow-up "pitch" and keep it in front of you when you call, e.g.: [If assistant answers the phone: "May I please speak to [the person to whom you addressed the cover letter]. Why am I calling? To follow up on a letter I sent him/her last week." [To letter addressee:] "I am ____, a CWSL 3L/recent grad and I'm following up on the letter and resume I sent on ____; I am very interested in working for your firm and hope your hiring needs might include someone with my background ... " But use your own words!
- Stay connected: An initial "No, we're not hiring" from an employer doesn't necessarily mean, "No, never, forget it", but rather that they are not hiring now. Maybe there will be an opportunity later.

Re: Associate Attorney Position

Dear Ms. Snyder:

Jonathon Franklin recommended that I contact you regarding a potential associate position with Martin and Jordan, LLP. I recently read an article in the San Diego Daily Transcript listing your firm as one of the top five labor and employment law firms in Southern California. My legal work experience has been primarily focused on employment law, and now that I am recently admitted to the California Bar, I am hoping to join the Martin and Jordan team as an associate attorney.

During law school, I gained substantial experience in my chosen specialty of labor and employment law. Most recently, my clinical internship at Thompson & Stevens provided me with practical training in this area. My research and investigation regarding claims of unfair labor practices, sexual harassment and wrongful termination reinforced my commitment to this area of the law. I also drafted a successful summary judgment motion relating to a claim of constructive discharge. I have significant additional experience in the area of labor and employment law through my positions at the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing and the Employee Rights Center where I worked on discovery as well as another summary judgment motion. I have also had extensive involvement with clients in the form of interviews, consultations, and representation at labor hearings. Overall, given my background, intellect, work ethic, and experience, I am able to provide your clients with the excellent representation they have come to expect.

I enclose my resume for your review. I know if given the opportunity, I can diligently and effectively serve your firm and its clients. I look forward to the opportunity to interview with you, and I thank you in advance for your consideration.

Very truly yours,

James Jackson

Smith & Jones, LLP

Re: Associate Attorney Position

Dear Ms. Smith:

As a recent graduate of California Western School of Law with a strong background in immigration law, I am interested in an associate or contract attorney position with Smith & Jones, LLP. As the daughter of Japanese and Israeli classical musicians, I was raised in Europe with many multinational influences. During law school, I discovered my aptitude for immigration law. The combination of working closely with clients, observing the direct impact of international factual situations on legal issues, and using written and oral advocacy to help clients achieve tangible solutions to their immigration needs, has been both challenging and rewarding.

I learned from the biographies on your website that the attorneys at Smith & Jones are not only highly skilled and renowned for their professional expertise, but truly believe in the work that they do. My goal is to bring the same combination of professional excellence and passion to the practice of law.

As a law clerk at Diamond & Associates, I helped clients around the globe, many in the high technology sector, apply for L-1B visas and responded to Requests for Evidence for H-1B applications. The pace of employment-based immigration practice is a good fit for me. I particularly strive to develop individualized legal strategies to optimize the outcome for each client. As a legal intern for the Casa Cornelia, I handled affirmative political asylum cases from start to finish. While representing asylum seekers at affirmative asylum interviews before USCIS agents, I honed my oral advocacy skills. I also developed strong interview skills, which allow me to put clients at ease when sharing their personal and often traumatic life stories. I take great satisfaction in fully informing clients of their options and guiding them through the often daunting immigration process with dignity.

I would appreciate a chance to talk with you about the possibility of working for Smith & Jones. I will contact you within the next two weeks to inquire about the possibility of an in-person meeting. In the meantime, please contact me if you have any further questions. I am attaching my résumé for your review.

Thank you for your time and attention.

Sincerely,

/s/ Cara Williams

Dear Ms. Smith:

This is in follow-up to a letter I sent to you approximately two weeks ago regarding possible contract attorney work with your firm. I haven't heard from you and understanding that you are very busy, I wanted to briefly check in with you to confirm that you received my letter and to reiterate my interest.

I am very interested in working with your firm, and I believe that I possess the skills and experience with which to make an immediate and positive impact on your practice.

If necessary, I would be glad to resend my original letter of interest and resume, or to provide any further information you might need regarding my qualifications. I look forward to hearing from you.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

VI. NETWORKING

Networking is the process of establishing long-term relationships in order to “resource share.” It is essential as a professional because it is one of the most successful ways to find a position and the most utilized method of recruiting by most employers. When networking, keep in mind that getting a job interview is not your immediate goal. If you approach networking expecting your contact to offer you a job, you will likely be disappointed. Instead, network with the goal of meeting people who can offer advice about your career choice, support in your endeavors, and are willing to share their contacts so you can continue to build your own network. Your network will be much more effective if you build relationships with your existing contacts. Your family, friends, professors, and CWSL alumni are great sources to begin. Reach out to them via letter, email, phone call or meeting, and watch your network grow.

A. Bar Association

The legal community thrives in and around bar associations. Lawyers, judges, and law students rely on bar associations to provide necessary professional development, professional networking opportunities and professional services and benefits. As a legal professional, you must become involved in your professional community, which includes being active in bar associations.

There are essentially two types of bar associations:

1. Geographically focused bar associations all over the country, e.g., the San Diego County Bar Association, North County Bar Association, Honolulu Bar Association, Beverly Hills Bar Association; and
2. Specialty bar associations that gather lawyers with common backgrounds or interests, e.g., the Pan Asian Lawyers of San Diego, American Immigration Lawyers Association or Association of Surfing Lawyers. There are many other bar associations that encourage student memberships. These other bar associations often relate to a law specialty (e.g., Criminal Defense Bar Association), ethnic group (e.g., San Diego La Raza Lawyers Association), or personal interests (e.g., Lawyer Pilots Bar Association). Consider joining a specialty bar association to expand your horizons in accordance with your interests.

If you are planning to practice in San Diego, another great bar association to consider joining is the Lawyers Club of San Diego, which offers discounted student memberships and has great programs, including an outstanding mentor program for students. Lawyers Club of San Diego seeks to advance the status of women in the law and in society. It is a voluntary bar association, comprised of female and male attorneys, judges, law students and others in the San Diego community who share these interests and goals. This is a very influential and worthwhile bar association for all students to join.

If you plan to practice outside San Diego, let us know, so we can help you find bar associations wherever you decide to work. You should join bar associations now to ensure that you develop and maintain contacts in your preferred region. Please see us for more information.

It is important not only to join and go to bar association events, but to become truly active in the associations' committees and sections. At your first event find the person who is responsible for putting it on, and ask them how you can get more involved and help out with the next project. Making a small commitment to become active in a bar association will pay off tremendously in relationships with established members of the legal community and potential job leads. Consult with a Career Advisor about how to become ACTIVE in your bar association, thereby maximizing the benefits to you.

B. Informational Interviews

An informational interview is an informal face-to-face meeting, usually about 15-20 minutes long, in a lawyer's office (or another location convenient for the attorney, such as over coffee or if they have time, over lunch; if in a paying situation – offer to pay for the attorney since you invited them) during which you ask questions about that lawyer's particular practice in order to gather information about their experiences and areas of practice, as well as trends, career options, and other topics related to that practice. If distance prohibits, informational interviews can be conducted over the telephone, but it is much better to conduct them in person.

They are a great way to meet people who do what you think you may want to do, who are members of the legal community, who will provide you with valuable advice or they might hire you or refer you to someone who will.

While you may really hope that an informational interview will lead to a job offer, and some informational interviews do eventually lead to job offers, an informational interview is not and must not be treated as a job interview. In some ways, this removes pressure from the situation. Your objective is not to get a job with this very person at this point in time, but rather to gather information and develop a relationship. If during the process more develops, or you are given a contact to another person, then you know you are making the process work for you.

#1 Sample Networking Email-Informational Interview

Mr. Williams:

Hello, my name is New Lawyer Jones, a recently licensed attorney working to build a business litigation practice here in San Diego.

In researching well regarded real estate firms in the local area, I came across your name and was impressed by your strong academic credentials, an achievement that I worked hard to add to my resume as well. I am also impressed by your firm's commitment to being involved in the local community, something that I would like to make an integral part of my practice as well. I was wondering if I could have 15-20 minutes of your time to meet with you to discuss how you were able to translate your academic qualifications into success in your practice, and how you enjoy your work in real estate. Your experienced input would be immensely valuable to me and I hope that you can spare a few moments of your time.

I would be happy to meet whenever convenient for you. Thank you in advance for your consideration, and I look forward to hearing from you.

Best regards,

Mr. Williams:

Hello, my name is New Lawyer Jones, a recently licensed attorney working to build a bankruptcy practice here in San Diego. In researching well regarded real estate firms in the local area, I came across your name and was impressed by your work representing Chapter 11 debtors and trustees. I also noticed that you began your career working for Judge Laughlin through the California Western Clinical Internship Program, much like myself who interned for Judge Chrysler through the same program.

As someone with a background similar to mine, I was wondering if I could have 15-20 minutes of your time to ask you some questions about your work in San Diego.

I am planning on attending your presentation at the San Diego County Bar Association on November 15 and would be happy to meet with you before or after the event, or to touch base at the reception. In any event, I would be happy to meet whenever convenient for you. Thank you in advance for your consideration.

Best,

Sample Informational Interview Email-Referral Contact

Ms. Smith:

Hello, my name is New Lawyer Jones. I am a recent graduate of California Western School of Law and Mr. John Klein suggested that I contact you. I am interested in building a bankruptcy practice here in San Diego, and I was wondering if I might have 15 to 20 minutes of your time to discuss your thoughts on how the current economic climate might affect the bankruptcy practice in this market and about my plan for trying to establish my practice in this area. John speaks highly of you. Your experienced input would be immensely valuable to me and I would be grateful for your thoughts.

I would be happy to meet with you whenever convenient for you. Thank you in advance for your consideration and I look forward to hearing from you.

C. Social Networking Sites

You can enhance your job search further by using online social networking sites including Twitter, Facebook and LinkedIn, to name a few. If done completely from a professional standpoint, these sites will help you build a legal professional network, post your online resume, and indirectly locate potential career opportunities. Online professional networking sites are also an easy way to stay connected to alumni groups and members of bar associations anywhere.

Remember: you have to develop your online presence PROFESSIONALLY, not PERSONALLY. When employers “google” you, what will they find?

VII. JOB SEARCH

A. Interviewing

An interview gives an employer an opportunity to determine whether or not an applicant has the credentials and abilities that match the employer’s hiring needs. Likewise, as a candidate, an interview gives you the opportunity to decide whether the position truly interests you and whether the culture of the firm is a right fit. As with most skills, interviewing takes preparation and practice.

1. Preparation.

- Appearance. Be properly and professionally dressed. First impressions are crucial. The suit you might wear out to dinner or a social event may not be the same suit you should wear to a legal job interview. Make sure you copiously attend to all features of your personal hygiene. Bad breath or a wrinkled shirt can really sink an interview. And you should consider your piercings and tattoos. Be sure to consult with the CPDO if you have any questions at all.
- Know Your History. Review your resume very carefully. You must refresh your recollection about all information on your resume and be able to discuss it in further detail. For example, if in a previous job you indicated that you “advised customers about appropriate systems for installation,” you must be able to explain about the systems, the installation, the types of customers, and perhaps even describe one or more particular circumstances in which you so advised customers. Or, if you reference a paper you wrote in college, you need to be able to discuss the topic and your thesis. You cannot find yourself faced with having to say “gee, I cannot remember” something about your own experience. In addition, be extremely familiar with your legal writing sample.
- Research The Employer. If you did not already do so to land the interview (in which case you were lucky), you must research the employer as thoroughly as possible. What is the history of the organization? What are the specific focuses of the practice? What are the backgrounds and practice areas of the organization’s individual lawyers? Do you know which lawyers will interview you? If so, find the background on each and every one of them. Who are the clients of the organization? Has the organization or any of its lawyers been written up in the press recently? Has the organization or any of its individual lawyers been involved in any reported cases?

- Consider Which Type of Interview You Might Encounter. There are several types of interviews which you will experience while seeking employment. These are:
 - One to One: One interviewer interviews one applicant.
 - Panel: Several interviewers simultaneously interview one applicant.
 - Group: More than one applicant interviewed at one time.
 - Multiple Interviewers: One applicant interviewed by several interviewers, but each interviewer interviews the applicant one to one.
 - Screening: An initial interview generally lasting 20-30 minutes to 1 hour and usually not intended to result in a job offer, but simply to refer potential applicants to a second, more in-depth interview. Many on-campus interviews are screening interviews.
 - Call-Back or Second Interviews: The more in-depth interview, conducted at the employer's offices. May be as short as one hour or may last an entire day with a series of shorter interviews that may be one on one, panel or group, with tours, lunch, information sessions and other activities.
- Anticipate Questions Which Might Be Asked and Develop Quality Responses. Some interviews are very informal and almost personal in nature. Others follow a more predictable format, i.e., there are commonly asked interview questions which many interviewers use, particularly government employers. Since it is likely that one or more, and quite possibly several of these will be asked, you have the opportunity to give outstanding responses if you have given thought to your answers in advance. Know what you plan to say.
- Prepare Questions for the Interviewer. At the close of many interviews, the interviewer often asks, "Do you have any questions for me?" Again, this presents a valuable opportunity for you to distinguish yourself from other candidates with intelligent, interesting questions. It also presents a trap into which you can fall if you are not prepared. ALWAYS ASK: What are the next steps in your decision-making process respecting this position?

Resist temptation to ask about benefits, salary, billable hours, attire or other similar questions until you have received an offer.

2. Practice. After you have prepared, schedule an appointment with one of our advisors for specific preparation tools and a mock interview in order to get feedback on your interview style.
3. Follow Up. IMMEDIATELY follow up your interview with a prompt thank you letter. If you agreed to send any additional information, make sure you do so. If you have not heard back from the interviewer within a reasonable time after the designated notice date, call the office. Politely inquire about the progress of their decision-making process.

B. Salary Negotiation

Negotiating your salary is oftentimes an awkward and intimidating conversation for prospective employees. While you want to get the highest salary possible, you do not want to turn an employer off with unrealistic salary demands. However, many employers expect you to give a salary requirement during an initial interview, therefore you must always be prepared to talk about it. As a prospective employee however, NEVER ask about salary until the offer is made.

Prior to an interview, you need to know what you are worth and what salary you are willing to accept. Some factors to consider include the cost of living in the city where the position is, the economy, the size of the employer and its practice area, your background and experience, your budget and family situation. Also, you need to do your research and determine what the market rate is for similar positions in the area for someone with your qualifications. Use past statistics accurately, but in your favor. On the CWSL website, you can find employment statistics for the past 4 years. In addition, large firms who belong to the National Association for Legal Placement Professionals (NALP) regularly publish first-year associate salaries through the NALP Directory (www.nalpdirectoy.com) and most federal, state and local government salaries are available on individual agencies' web sites.

Remember that a salary negotiation is just that, a dialogue to reach a mutually beneficial agreement. Many other factors come into play when negotiating your salary such as:

- Possible bonuses
- Will this job give you the experience you need to get you that better paying job?
- Benefits
- Billable Hour Requirements
- Work Atmosphere
- Type of Work

C. Correspondence

- Thank You Letters. You absolutely MUST send a thank you letter after every interview, meeting or substantive telephone call you have with anyone in the course of your job search, even if you do not plan to pursue work with the employer or contact. Not only is a thank you letter the courteous thing to do, it is one more way to be professionally remembered. The thank you letter must be sent or emailed within 24 hours of the interview or other contact. Waiting more than that will drastically reduce the impact. Attorneys are in the business of producing quality work under extreme time constraints and your prompt thank you shows you are serious, capable of getting something out quickly and sincerely interested in the job.

The thank you letter allows you to express your appreciation for the time someone spent with you and to remind the employer of your qualifications and enthusiasm. You can do this by keeping your thank you letter brief. Two or three paragraphs are plenty. The best letters will include reference to the date you interviewed and reference to something particularly memorable from your conversation with the interviewer:

“Thank you for meeting with me on November 1, 2013. I was particularly interested in the description of your work involving the responsible development of the South Bay waterfront. I look forward to being involved with similar proactive work myself. I hope that your hearing on Wednesday night concerning the downtown historic zoning district went well. It is events and topics like these that make me excited for the potential to work with you.”

This will not only show your attentiveness to what the person had to say, but also reminds the individual of who you are.

When you interview with more than one person, you must write to each person individually. Make sure all letters are different and perfectly error free; they may be compared and critiqued by the recipients. An error at this stage of the game, even if the interview went well, can be fatal.

When sending by mail, remember to print your thank you letter on the same high quality paper as your resume, with the same heading (“letterhead”) as your resume and cover letter. And as always, use formal business format for the letter. When you had a great interview, the thank you letter can seal the deal. Be sure to spell the recipient’s name correctly and use their proper title, if any. You should ask for each interviewer’s business card, so you will have this information.

- Acceptance Letters. This letter is used to accept a job offer and confirm the terms of your employment (salary, starting date, etc.). It often follows a formal written offer letter or a telephone conversation in which you discussed the details of the offer and terms of employment. Your acceptance letter is a means to ensure that everyone is on the same page, and that all parties’ expectations are met. Your letter is a contractual acceptance of a contractual offer. Treat it as such, and close with an appropriate expression of your enthusiasm about joining the group.

“I am very pleased to accept your offer of an associate position at Bennett, Cantor and Barron. I understand that I will start on Monday, May 11 2015 in your San Francisco office and the position will be full-time. You indicated the salary will be $65,000 per year. The opportunity to work with a firm of your reputation in this field is very exciting to me, and I look forward to becoming part of the team.”

- Declining Offer Letters. This letter is used to reject an offer of employment. Indicate that you genuinely appreciate the extension of the offer that you have carefully considered it, but that you have decided not to accept. You do not need to include details of an offer that you have accepted or why you are rejecting this one.

In the event you need more time to decide to take an offer, make sure you communicate that to your prospective employer. Never take time to think about an offer without letting your prospective employer know you are doing so. They may interpret the lack of communication as a rejection to their offer.

“Thank you very much for your offer of employment as a volunteer Post Bar Clerk with the San Diego District Attorney’s Office. I appreciate your confidence in my abilities. I am currently in the process of finalizing my post-graduate plans and will respond to your offer within the timeframe you have set.”

- Response Letters to Rejection. This letter is used in response to receiving a letter of rejection of employment from a potential employer. A letter should be sent in this situation indicating that you understand that the employer was not able to offer you employment, but you still appreciate the time extended toward you, as well as any insights and expertise bestowed upon you. You are further indicating that if circumstances should change in the future, you would still like to be considered for a position and wish the firm continued success.

"Dear Mr./Ms. _____:

I received your (voice message/letter etc.) on August 5, 2014, informing me that I would not be invited for a second interview. While I am disappointed because I felt the position would have been a good fit given your practice and my experience, I certainly respect your decision. So that I may assess my situation as I move forward in my pursuit of a career in patent litigation, any information as to where I may have fallen short of your firm's expectations would be very helpful. Your insight would be of tremendous value.

I wanted to let you know how much I appreciate the consideration you extended to me. Should your circumstances change, please consider me in the future, as my interest in your firm continues.

Please extend my best to the members of your firm. I wish you all continued success.

Best,

your name

D. Branding

As an attorney, it is always important to distinguish yourself from your competition. This is true if you are fresh out of school, looking for employment or a seasoned attorney working at a big firm. Personal branding is a way to articulate your strengths, particular skills, and leave a lasting impression on potential employers, new clients and the legal community at large. The branding process involves defining your unique position in the legal world and designing a brand that communicates that position. It is also a process that will continue to evolve as your career evolves.

E. Components of Branding

- Business Cards – Your professional introduction and pertinent contact information.
- Resume - It should be a brief, focused, dynamic marketing tool that conveys your key credentials for a future position.
- Letterhead – Use similar paper, fonts and formatting as your resume.
- Logo – If you plan on working as a freelance attorney for the long haul, it would be a great idea to invest time and money into designing a logo.
- Website – Create a professional website that includes some version of your resume, contact information, and recommendations from colleagues or past employers.

VIII. SOLE PRACTITIONER

Starting your own practice is an ambitious dream many new and seasoned attorneys share. While the pay can be inconsistent and hours long, most attorneys who value independence, the freedom to select their own clients, and the idea of being one's own boss, prefer the solo life to the life of working in a firm. Three of the most important keys to a successful practice are experience, a strong network, and commitment. To help determine if going solo is right for you, make an appointment with your Career Advisor to further discuss the pro and cons of going solo.

A. Access to Law Initiative

The Access to Law Initiative (ALI) is a new program of California Western School of Law, developed to promote access to legal services and to support lawyers who wish to have solo, small firm, or non-profit practices. ALI has two Incubator Law Offices located in downtown San Diego. If you are interested in applying to become a member of the ALI Incubator Law Office, please contact Matthew Lab at mlab@cwsl.edu.

B. Solo Practitioner Must Reads

1. How to Start and Grow a Law Practice by Jay Foonberg. The most important book you will ever read about the practice of law. I recommend it even if you work for a law firm.
2. Solo by Choice: How to be the Lawyer You Always Wanted to Be by Carolyn Elefant. The most important modern book on how to start a law practice.
3. Solo Contender by Marc Garfinkle.

IX. ALTERNATIVE CAREERS

At some point in their career, some lawyers may develop an interest in pursuing careers outside traditional legal practice. Whether you entered law school without any intention to practice law or determined at some point in your career that you were interested in a transition to a non-legal job, our office can assist you in pursuing "alternative careers". Our Graduate Career Advisor can meet with you to discuss how to use your legal degree outside the practice of law as well as translate the skills you developed as a law student or attorney into other career fields.
